It will be seen that the reported renewal of the bombardment of Vera Crix turns out to be untrue. It does not appear, indeed, that since his withdrawal on the 21st Miramon had again made his appearance before the city. His retirement was confessedly for good. One of the powder-houses on the canal above Portsmouth, Ohio, was blown up the other evening, but no one was killed. King Victor Emmanuel has just entered city. forty-first year, having been born on the

The besieging army, however, still remained encamped in and about the village of Medellin, where the small pox was said to be raging among them. If this be true, the expedition is certainly at an end. In any case, considering the near approach of the season of the deadly voraito, it is impossible that the attack upon the city will be renewed the present season.

In the meantime, two more prizes had been captured at sea and taken into Vera Cruz. Miramon may, therefore, give up all hopes of having his stores replenished from Havana, and, with his convoys cut off from the interior, he may consider himself lucky if he succeeds in getting his army safe back again to Mexico. There are few people so thoroughly truthful as not gently to put down suspicion or opinion on a false track, when by doing so they can save themselves or their friends. Rev. J. R. Rogers, one of the parties re-cently expelled from Kentucky, spoke in the Center church, in New Haven, Conn., on Sunday, giving a narrative of his expulsion.

rior, he may consider himself lucky if he succeeds in getting his army safe back again to Mexico.

From the capital, the Saramash brings us advices to the 19th ult. It is of a most important character. The order, banishing all American citizens from that portion of the Republic over which the Miramon Gevernment exercises authority, and confiscating their property, had actually been published. This was in retalistion for the capture of the Havana co-operating expedition. Fortunately, however, its absurdity would be sufficient guarantee against the attempt, even if it were possible to carry it into execution.

In the meantime, however, as we learn from numerous private letters, the actual state of things at the capital is frightful in the extreme. Immediately after the departure of the troops on the expedition to Vera. Cruz, the bonds of society scened to be cut loose, and intrigues for the overturn of the Corona Government were set on foot in every direction. As might be expected, however, among such a population, there was no concert of plans or of action, and thus far scervdirection. As might be expected, however, among such a population, there was no concert of plans or of action; and thus far everything had come to nought. Each party and each ambitious leader of his party would listen only to his own plans, and therefore succeed only in producing confusion worse confounded. Among the rest, guerrilla parties of discontents had organized themselves within and without the city, and "there is scarcely a night," says one letter, "that same carcely a night," says one letter, "that some conflict does not take place."

A good man, who has seen much of the world says: "The grand essentials to happi-ness in this life are something to do, some-thing to love, and something to hope for." A Paris paper states that M. Dudevant, Sand) a son of the celebrated authoress, has received the decoration of the cross of the Legion of of Honor from the Emperor. The Vera Cruz correspondent writes to the Picayone March 23, as follows:

Bicagone March 23, as follows:

Since my last to you, of the 21st instant, I have been taking a stroll over this desolate looking city to see the destruction caused by the inhuman and barbarous bombardment of Miramon. It is truly lamentable to see the destruction of property. By it hundreds of poor persons are deprived of their homes. Instead of throwing his shells along the lines of the forts among the troops, he threw them right into the heart of the city, and but for the temporary moving of families, there would have been a terrible destruction of life. As it was, fortunately, the losses were small. They fell, however, mostly upon the defenseless women and children and a few men.

It appears that the losses among the troops in killed were seven, and thirty wounded, while among the citizens there were ten killed and about thirty wounded. The latter were mostly women, and children.

On the other side it is computed that Miramon lost over a hundred in killed. It is said that some ninety dead bodies have already been found. He has also some three hundred wounded. Thank God he got most terribly worsted for his barbarity.

Yesterday Miramon answered the letter of A little girl, daughter of Philo Williams, living at Scull Shoals, Georgia, died on Mon-day from eating matches; the phosphorus thereon poisoning her to death. Another letter from Vera Cruz, dated the 23d ult., gives this intelligence:
Robles has, finished his bloody work, and returns with his forces, leaving the city in ruins. A heavy bombardment of eight days could not conquer this city, the garrison, consisting altogether of National Guards, defending it to their utmost.

The loss of lives has been comparatively small, owing to the opportune emigration of the inhabitants; nevertheless, many innocent women and children have fallen. The loss of property is considerable, and calculated to be about five millions of dollars. The destruction of houses alone, amounts to over three millions of dollars. It appears that Miramon retired from the camp on the 20th inst, disgusted with the mode of warfare, and gave the command to Robles, requesting him to return with his forces. Robles, however, being left in sole command, exerted himself, nevertheless, and increased the firing of shells to such an extent that at times three shells were in the air, and the round shot uncountably.

Miramon, Robles & Co., cowards in the highest sense of the word, did not dare to attack the city in any other way, and instead of directing their destructive fire upon the fortifications and batteries, took their aim precisely on the best part of the town. Horrible Execution at Constantinople A Wife and Paramour Punished by the Bowstring and Yataghan.

The Levant Herald of March 7, has the an nexed account of an execution at Constantinople:

On Sunday morning, the wife and paramour, the murderer of the late Ferik Ibrahim Pasha, suffered the late penalty of the law at the Stamboul end of Karakeui Bridge. As the sentence of the condemned couple had been confirmed several days before by the Bultan, it would have been immediately carried into effect but for the difficulty of finding an executioner, the popular feeling as to fuch services being now widely different from what it was in the "good old times," when the bowstring and the seimetar were seldom a day unused. At last, however, the (considered) high wages of five hundred plasters induced a gipsey to undertake the job, and on Sonday morning, accordingly, this now unusual tragedy was performed in the area in front of the fowl-shops beyond the bridge.

Shortly after five o'clock (Frank time) the prisoners were brought from the Zaptieh prison, under a guard of soldiers and canvasses—the man on foot, with his hands tied prison, under a guar of soluters and canvasses—the man on foot, with his hands tied

On arriving at the end of the bridge, the

of the chair, and, from the sudden tremor which seized on her, after catching sight of the two upright poles with their grim crossbeam, and the movements of preparation among the guard, it was evident that what could at most have been only a suspicion in her mind before, then flashed into a terrible certainty. She moaned pitcously at first, then broke into a low cry of "aman, aman."

The body was then earlied out and hung up on the fail gallows for it.

While this half of the tragedy had been in course of accomplishment within the khan, the male culprit had suffered his punishment outside. As soon as the woman was removed the male calprit had suffered his punishment outside. As soon as the woman was removed into the building, an officer read aloud a statement of the prisoner's crime and sentence—announced to the wretched man for the first time. He was then told to kneel down, which he did, stretching forward his neck without hesitation or resistance, but looking, as a bystander remarked, like a man who had died yesterday. The glipsy then drew his yataghan (a heavy, inwardly-curying blade) and struck a single-handed blow close to the shoulder end of the neck; the criminal fell over on his face and made a few wounded. Thank God he got most terribly worsted for his barbarity.

Yesterday Miramou answered the letter of protest sent to him by Capt. Aldham, of the Valorous, in which he says he ceased firing or bombarding the place for humanity sake. This we know to be a base falsehood, as he quitted because he had no more powder, and because his convoy from Mexico with ammunition had been taken. posed to view throughout the day, with placards announcing their crime stitched to the front of both. Since last week, we have been informed that jealousy, and not a criminal intrigue with the male murderer, was the impelling motive of the woman's share in her husband's death. The latter, it appears, had taken to himself a young slave, and, maddened by his refusal to turn away this trespasser on the conjugal domain, the wretched wife planned and accomplished the old man's death as we have related.

New Attempt to Swindle-Forging a Lottery Prize-list in Mobile

Mr. Lezo not having a sufficient amount of money at hand to discount the ticket, went with the stranger to see a friend, that they might take it into copartnership; but the friend, being better posted in the sailings of the Havana steamers, thought the news had got there rather early, and auggesting that there might be some mistake, proposed to telegraph to New Orleans, recommending to the ticket-holder that he had better call again in the evening. The ticket-holder was willing to do this, but wanted to leave before evening, and therefore objected to any delay. Finding, however, that his "hurry" availed him nothing, he went off, and has not been seen since. In the meantime, the message of inquiry was forwarded to New Orleans, and before night an answer received, stating that the prize-list was a forgery, as no vessel had yet arrived from Havana.

Thrilling Adventure—An Eucounter with Esquimana Dogs. The following extruct from Dr. Hayes's Arctic Boat Journey" will be read with interest at the present time, when the writer's proposed Polar Expedition is one of the topics of the day:

"The dogs were fastened by their long traces, each team being tied to a separate stake. They were howling pitcously. Having been exposed to all the fury of the storm, with no ability to run about, they had grown cold; and, as their masters told us, having had with no about to run about, they made os a cold; and, as their masters told us, having had nothing to eat during thirty-six hours, they must have been savagely hungry. One of them had already eaten his trace; but we came out, fortunately, at the proper moment to prevent an attack upon the sledges.

"Leaving the hunters to look after their teams, I returned to the hut. The blinding snow which hattered my face made me insensible to everything except the idea of getting out of it; and thinking of no danger, I was in the act of stooping to enter the doorway, when a sudden noise behind me caused me to look around, and there, close at my heels, was the whole pack of thirteen hungry dogs, snarling, snapping, and showing their sharp teeth like a drove of ravenous wolves. It was fortunate that I had not got down upon my knees, or they would have been upon my back.

was fortunate that I had not got down apon my back.

In fact, so impetuous was their attack, that one of them had already sprung when I faced round. I caught him on my arm and kicked him down the hill. The others were for a moment intimidated by the suddenness of my movement, and at seeing the summary manner in which their leader had been dealt with; and they were in the act of sneaking away, when they perceived that I was powerless to do them any harm, having nothing in my liand. Again they assumed the offensive; they were all around me, an instant more and I should be torn to pieces. I had faced death in several shapes before, but never had I felt as then; my blood fairly curdled in my veins. Death down the red throats of a pack of wolfish dogs had something about it peculiarly unpleasant. Conscious of my weakness, they were preparing for a spring. I had not time even to holloo for help; to run would be the readiest means of bringing the wretches upon me. My eye swept round the groupand caught something lying half buried in the snow, about ten feet distant. Quick as flash I sprang, as I never sprang before or since, over the back of a huge fellow who stood before; and the next instant I was whirling about me the lash of a long whip, cutting to right and left. The dogs retreated before my blows and the fury of my onset, and then sullenly skulked behind the rocks. The whip had clearly saved my life; there was nothing else within my reach; and it had been dropped there quite accidentally by Kalutunah as he went down to the sledges.

crious Powder Explosion from Smoking a Cigar-Six Persons Dangerously

a Clear—Six Persons Dangerously Injured.

At Nantes, in France, a singular accident occurred a short time ago. A boy, named Visud, was sent to carry to a quarryman a bag containing about twenty-five pounds of gunpowder for blasting, and in the Rue de la Fosse he stopped to look at some prints in a stationer's shop. He there lighted a cigar and incautiously threw away the lighted match, which must have fallen on the bag on the ground. A loud explosion immediately took place, and the boy's clothes took fire. The persons near tore off the garments, but he was so scriously burnt that he had to be conveyed to the hospital. A cab driver, who was standing near him, had his clothes also set on fire, and they were almost entirely consumed; he had to be wrapped in a sheet to be removed to the hospital. By the explosion a gentleman of property, named Charriere, who happened to be looking in at the shop window, had his eyes so injured that the sight of one is lost, and little hope is entertained of preserving that of the other. Three other persons in the street and some in the shop were more or less injured. The windows of the stationer's and some of the adjacent houses were broken. cent houses were broken.

FURTHER TROUBLES IN DR. CHERVER'S CHURCH.—The friends of Dr. Cheever, in New York, who supposed they had triumphed at the late election for trustees, find themselves entangled in new difficulties by the election inspectors, who have issued certificates to the anti-Cheever candidates. The cates to the anti-Cheever candidates. The vote stood thirty-three for the Cheever men, and thirty-one for the other side; but the inspectors allege that six illegal votes were cast by the Cheever men, which places the candidates of his party in the minority. The by-laws require that a member shall have paid pew rent and attended the church a year preceding the election in order to vote. It is alleged that Dr. Cheever issued certificates for pew rent to those who had not paid, and that the treasurer alone had power to receive payments and issue certificates. paid, and that the treasurer alone had power to receive payments and issue certificates. At a meeting of the Church on Saturday evening, the friends of Dr. Cheever served an injunction on the anti-Cheever trustees, is-sued by a Judge of the Supreme Court, and thus the question is going to the Courts.

DOUSTYUL COMPLIMENT FROM AN AFRICAN PRINCE.—Anamboo, an African Prince, visiting England, received so many attentions from a celebrated belie of London that in a moment of tenderness, he could not refrain from laying his hand on his heart and exclaiming: "Ohl madam, if Heaven had only made you a negress, you would have been irresistible!"

TEMULENT THUNDER.—The finest idea of a thunder storm is when Wiggins came home tight. He came into the room where his wife and daughters were, and just then he stumbled over the cradle and fell whop on the floor. After a short time he rose and said: "Wife, are you hurt?" "No." "Girls, are you hurt?" "No." "Terrible clap; wasn't it?" TEMULENT THUNDER,--The finest idea of a CANING APPAIR BETWEEN TWO HONORA CANING APPAIR BETTEEN TWO HOSOSA-nics.—Indianapolis was enlivened yesterday, by a caning affair between Hon J. W. Gor-don, Speaker of the Indians House of Repre-sentatives, and Hon, Gordon Tanner, Repor-ter of the Supreme Court, Mr. Gordon being the assaulting party. The difficulty grew out of a belligerent correspondence published in the Sentines, from which it appears that Mr. Gordon had declined to settle a quarrel according to the "code."

Napoleon III is the Character of as Aster.—At a recent sale at the public auction-rooms in Paris, an India-ink drawing bearing the signature "L. N. Bonaparte," executed by the Emperor many years ago, and presented by him to Mmc. Recamier, was sold for 736f. to Count Cruski, formerly Marshal of the nobles of Warsew. The design represents the chatcau of Arenenberg, in Switzerland, with a young shepherd leaning against a tree and playing on a pipe.
